Lifelong Learners

As the child moves through the elementary, reading and writing increase dramatically across all subjects of the rich and diverse curriculum. Empowered by stronger literacy skills, the child becomes increasingly independent, creating special projects and initiating in-depth research well on the way to becoming a lifelong learner.

As the child progresses, informal inventories as well as formal assessments are utilized to diagnose and address any specific literacy needs which may emerge.

All of it begins with a time-tested program of concrete experiences within a environment designed to bring a world of meaning to the child.

Working Together

Supporting Literacy

Parents often have questions about how the children learn to read and write at school.

With a clear and consistent understanding, we can all work together to actively support the work our children do.

How does Mata Montessori approach literacy?

What distinguishes the Mata Montessori approach to literacy is our strong belief in following the Montessori curriculum, yet carefully evaluating and selecting other best practices which prove compatible with Montessori.
